Small is the New BIG

3 Big Rules (& 4 small ones) for Designing Gardens

City-sized gardens, high density urban housing, precious few hours for leisure—and even fewer for slaving in the garden—you have to be a master of invention or mistress of ingenuity when it comes to fitting a garden into a busy 21st century life. Today's savvy gardeners are creating small gardens with big impact that enhance our lives and still allow time for relaxing.

Author, speaker, editor, and avid home gardener and cook, Lorene Edwards Forkner pursues a garden-based life filled with seasonal pleasures, delicious flavors, and creativity. A small city garden is her canvas for color play and exploring pleasing plant combinations, as well as a living workshop for her many projects. Lorene is the editor of Pacific Horticulture magazine, a quarterly publication exploring plants and gardens on the West Coast and from similar growing regions around the world, and featuring the gardeners who tend them.
